The car driven by Sergeant F. L. Williams, which was wrecked on the road while going toward Douglas, was not hit as some supposed, by the alleged speeder, for there is not the slightest fresh mark on the side of the car, which would show had it been hit by the speeder. The latest explanation of the accident is that the driver of the wrecked car was blinded by the approaching headlight and crowded as well, and through the two drove so near the edge of the turn that the right hind wheel of his car slipped over the edge of the bank, thus turning the car over.
